Bates of West Paris, and the box and two of their friends from Kenfree use of same has been offered to the Boy Sconts of Oxford County for a sum-mer camp, which is to be held the last week in July and the first three weeks

Arrangements are being made to accommodate from 50 to 75 boys at one time, and it is hoped that all the Boy Scouts in the county will be able to spend at least one week at this camp some time during the four weeks that It is the plan to have the boys occupy tents, and to have suitable and comfortable places to sleep, to be fully protectboarded for four dollars per week.

Harold Perham, the Scout executive for Oxford County, will be in constant attendance, together with assistants as may be necessary. Arrangements for a good supply of water, and for all saniway as will meet with the approval of Dr. Wight of Bethel and Dr. Willard of Bryant's Pond, who were chosen as a committee to have this matter in charge. It is hoped that a large attendance at this boys' camp will make this first summer's camp a complete success, and if there is anything in a location surely this ideal spot should help to do so. The camps will be located on high land overlooking the pond, with a good chance for fishing, boating and swimvoted that no smoking should be allowed either by the boys or visitors anywhere on the grounds, and that Mr. Perhan should ask all visitors to refrain from same, if he found it necessary to do so. House For Sale. Two and one-half stories, fourteen finshed rooms. Chance for two lawn and driveway. Inquire of C. M. MERRILL. South Paris, Me.

Miss Mary Fridell was a dear old maid, who lived all alone not far from the school house. She was quite widely known as the very best pie-maker any-where. Many folks had wondered why a woman who could make such pies should have remained single. Perhaps Miss Mary knew, but if she did she let no one into the secret. On the particular morning in which his story opens she had just finished her morning work, and was preparing to sit down, when she heard a knock at the door. It was Tommy Bowen, holding in his arms a nice, creamy-looking pump-kin with a neck on it.

HOMEMAKERS' COLUMN

A Run on Pie. (By Flora Swetnam.)

"Thank you, Tommy," beamed Miss Mary. "It certainly was good of you to think of me." "I'—I was thinkin' of pie," Tommy confessed truthfully. "I want a piece when you bake 'em."

"You shall have it, of course." Then, as a sudden thought came, "You didn't ring this without your mother's consent, did you?"
"No'm," assured Tommy. "She told me to bring it, but I didn't want to, and she said maybe you'd give me a piece of

"All right. You come around to-mor-tow and get your pie."
"I will," promised Tommy, as he ran down the steps.

The next day, when Tommy stopped, Miss Mary had ready on the lid of a shoe box, with a pretty paper napkin beneath it, a great big piece of pie. Tommy's eyes shone, as he thanked her, and started on toward the school house. That piece of pie was so pretty Tommy just hated to bite into it. Its side presented a golden and a white stripe, which filled Tommy's idea of art. As he walked along, looking at it, a stranger accosted him.

"Say, son, where'd you get that pie?"
"Miss Mary gave it to me," said Tom; my proudly.
"Not Miss Mary Fridel!" exclaimed the stranger. 'Snre. 'She's the best pie-maker in

"I'll give a quarter for half of that,"

"Miss Mary gave it to me."
"Sho! What made her?"
"I took her a pumpkin," bragged Tommy. "You take her one and she'll

"We haven't got any," mourned John-ny. "Our garden's not big enough."
"No," answered Tommy, "I guess not. Gee! but it was fine."
"What else could I take her?"
"Apples?" suggested Tommy.
"No," Johnny shook his head dis onsolately.

"Plums," shouted Tommy victoriousy. "You have the very best late plums "Sure enough," said Johnny with a sigh of relief. Johnny could hardly wait for his last lesson so he could run home. Once there, he hunted a basket and asked to plums. His mother was surprised, but she was also much pleased at Johnny's thoughtfulness. She helped him fill the basket with the finest ones, and a short time later Miss Mary was answering another knock at the door.
"Why, Johnny!" she exclaimed.
"Now, this surely is good of you. What can I offer you to show you how thankful I am?"

"Is there any more pumpkin pie?"
inquired Johnny hopefully.

"I'm sorry, Johnny," said Miss Mary,
"but I sent one to the minister's wife, and one to old Mrs. White, because she never gets out any, and I gave the schoolma'am a piece this afternoon, and there's no pum'pkin pie left. I'll tell you what, I'll make a plum pie to-morrow—just the very best one—and as you go back to school to-morrow at noon, you may stop and get a piece."
"That'll do all right," declared Johnny, and went home with visions of that um pie before him.

The next day at noon he was at Miss Mary's door, and when she appeared his eyes grew round with delight. His piece of pie, he thought, was ever so much prettier than Tommy's, for the stripes were a rich, dark red and white, and on the top just the faintest sprinkle of red ugar.
Johnny thanked Miss Mary properly and went toward the school house with his pie. He was soon the center of a group of small boys, whose mouths were watering, but Johnny walked right on. His nose stuck into the meringue every time he took a bite, but that did not disturb him in the least. By and by the group went back to marbles and other games, all but Jimmy Spencer. Johnny gave him what was left.

"U-m-m!" said Jimmy. "Where'd

you get it?''
"Miss Mary Fridell gave it to me." "What for?" "Well, I took her a basket of plums," answered Johnny, loftily.

"I've got some apples," ventured Jimmy. "Do you reckon she likes apples?"

"Of course," replied Johnny. "Everybody does if there's any marrow in his Jimmy wasn't certain what the marrow had to do with it, but he didn't in-tend to miss a good thing, so it was only a short time after school was over for the afternoon that he stood on Miss Mary's porch with a basket of fine ap-ples in his hand. Miss Mary was just coming through the ball and she spied "My, what nice apples, Jimmy," she

"Yes'm," answered Jimmy. "Will they make good pies?".

"They certainly will," assured Miss Mary with dancing eyes, "and you may stop on your way to school to-morrow at noon and get a piece." "Thank you ma'am," grinned Jimmy

And it came to pass, on the next day, when he appeared at her door, Miss Mary met him with a whole little pie baked in a small pan. It was a sliced apple pie, and he could see some of the juicy filling between the bars of rich, brown crust, which were laced back and Never before values like these.

"Say, sonny," coaxed the man, "wha will you take for that pie?"
"Nothing," answered Jimmy, quickening his pace. "You can't get this pie at

"No," scoffed Jimmy, "but Miss Mary's there, and there's always pie
